The long season of Hollywood awards presentations comes to a close on March 2 with the 86th annual Academy Awards®. The Ohioana Library, which was founded the same year the first “Oscars®” were presented (1929), has honored many Ohio writers and performers whose work won or was nominated for one of the coveted gold statuettes. In celebration of this year’s event, we present the following quiz about Ohioana and the movies. Have fun!

In this collection of poems, renowned Children's Poet Laureate J. Patrick Lewis celebrates the world's civil rights leaders. Both famous and lesser-known heroes such as Nelson Mandela, Coretta Scott King, Josh Gibson, and Jackie Robinson are brought to life in stunning verses. Each poem tells the story of an activist's struggles and triumphs as they fought to make the world a better place. Beautiful illustrations and a short biography accompany each poem, making this the perfect book to introduce upper elementary readers to civil rights leaders. Adults will surely enjoy Lewis' work, too, and appreciate the care that went into each verse. The poems truly speak for themselves, and are a wonderful way to honor the men and women who dedicated their lives to justice, equality, and a better future.

James Karales was born in 1930 in Canton, Ohio. After graduating from Ohio University, he moved to New York and eventually became a staff photographer for Look magazine in 1960. This job not only allowed him to travel the world, but also gave him the opportunity to document the civil rights movement over the course of several years. During this time he developed a professional relationship with Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., and became one of only a few photographers who were granted access to King's home.

The photographs in Controversy and Hope include a range of assignments between 1960 and 1965, culminating with the historic Selma to Montgomery March for Voting Rights. Karales documented not only the major events of the civil rights movement, but also the preparations leading up to them, including quiet moments with the King family at home. Although the book includes iconic photographs, these images of “small moments” and of individuals during the march help tell a more personal story and provide a rare and moving perspective of events that changed the nation.

NEW BOOKS

The following books arrived at the Ohioana Library in January. Look for them at your local library or bookstore!

Nonfiction

Margaret Garner was an escaped slave who, in 1865, killed her daughter rather than have her forced back into slavery. This collection of essays focuses on women's resistance to slavery and oppression from the nineteenth to the twenty-first century.

Using more than 150 images and interviews with architects and homeowners, Cleveland Goes Modern explores and documents the work of six modernist architects. Based on the award-winning exhibition of the same name, the book makes an important contribution to both regional and national architecture—especially since some of the homes featured in the book no longer exist.

Farmer and philosopher Logsdon reflects on the events of his life and his recent bout with cancer, always keeping in mind what farming and nature have taught him about life and death.

In 1963, the Ireland Spuds made it to the Sweet Sixteen of Indiana high school basketball with the help of a colorful coach and a heroic cast of players. Roos, whose father was the Ireland High School principal, paints a realistic picture of life in small-town Indiana when basketball was king.

Fiction

Kate Chase Sprague was born in 1840 in Cincinnati, Ohio. Her father, widower Salmon P. Chase, was a member of Lincoln’s cabinet and aspired to the presidency himself. When Kate stepped into the role of her father’s social hostess, she became the belle of Washington. Only Mary Todd Lincoln was more powerful—or had more to lose. Through the stories of these two women, Chiaverini provides a unique look at national politics during the Civil War.

When Emily Harrison loses her Ohio farm to foreclosure at the beginning of the Civil War, she finds work as a governess in Virginia and decides to continue her work with the Underground Railroad there despite the danger. Little does she know that her new employer’s nephew, Alexander, is a Southern spy. As the attraction between Emily and Alexander deepens and the war rages around them, can they find a way to overcome their differences?

In this collection of short stories, Flanagan follows a group of Midwesterners as they face life’s joys and challenges.

Sheriff Bruce Robertson investigates the murder of Ruth Zook, who was coerced into becoming a drug mule while visiting Florida’s Pinecraft Amish community. When another woman has a similar experience, Robertson must stop the killing before more innocent lives are lost.

When the prize stallion Devil Dancer is shot, new detective Wendell Clay volunteers to work the case. His investigation takes him from the rolling hills of the Kentucky Bluegrass region to the mob-run dives of Newport and exposes him to a unique cast of characters as well as the dark side of the human heart.

Poetry

Gundy’s sixth book of poetry links local wisdom to distant events and everyday life to sacred callings.

Mort Krahling lived most of his adult life in Kent, Ohio, where he worked multiple jobs and wrote poetry. This collection, culled from the nearly 400 poems he left at the time of his death in 1998, provides both a personal and public history of the town and its people.

Looking Ahead:
The National League of American Pen Women

To celebrate Women's History Month, Ohioana is partnering with The National League of American Pen Women and the State Library of Ohio to present “Parallel Arts—Women Create,” an exhibit of writing, art, and music. Learn about the NLAPW and the exhibit below!

The National League of American Pen Women (NLAPW), headquartered in Washington D.C., may be the oldest women's arts organization in the country. Founded in 1897, it is a recipient of the Literary Hall of Fame Award and received the George Washington Honor Medal sponsored by the Freedoms Foundation at Valley Forge for its collaborative effort to promote an understanding and appreciation of America's rich heritage and unique freedoms.

Notable past members of the NLAPW include authors Pearl Buck and Eudora Welty; sculptress Vinnie Ream (the only person to sculpt Abraham Lincoln from life just days before his assassination); Margaret Sanger, the founder of Planned Parenthood; and First Lady Eleanor Roosevelt, lauded as the hardest working active member of NLAPW (with a syndicated column as well as radio broadcasts and speaking engagements). Many members have been Pulitzer Prize winners.

Although the Greater Columbus Chapter of the NLAPW is alive and well today, that has not always been the case. Nearly a decade ago, the Dublin, Columbus, and Central Ohio Chapters were losing faithful, long-time members through the aging process, causing concern for each chapter. A meeting was held among the three chapters with the idea of merging. The NLAPW welcomed the proposal and the Greater Columbus Chapter was born.

The NLAPW's quarterly magazine, The Pen Woman, is just one venue for the twenty active chapter members to showcase their talents. Others include local and national exhibits, book signings, speaking engagements, and concerts. The purpose is to raise awareness of the importance of the arts and to help promote the NLAPW's mission of outreach and education.

Today, members of the Greater Columbus Chapter continue to carry on the values and mission of the NLAPW and understand the power of words to initiate action, the power of art to move and inspire, and the power of an arranged score to nourish the universal soul.

Additional information about the National League of American Pen Women can be found on its website: www.nlapw.org.
